

Abstract

The invention concerns single-chain antibodies directed 10 against the p53 protein, capable of being expressed in tumoral cells, capable of restoring a DNA binding in vitro and a transcription activator function in vivo. The invention also concerns nucleic acids coding for these molecules, the vectors containing them and their uses.